Presley & Taylor

Raised in a small farm town in New England, sisters Presley (rounding the corner to turn 20) and Taylor (who is 18) were surrounded by acres and acres of green pasture freedom in Connecticut and raised by the Golden Rule to learn the value of hard work, self-respect, and to respect others. They spent much of their childhood alongside their family of talented musicians listening to traditional country music trendsetters (Tammy Wynette, Alan Jackson, Randy Travis, and Tanya Tucker) who paved their way to become legends in the genre.

"We just knew we wanted to sing together, so we practiced along with songs on the radio. After years of listening to, and learning from, our family, the harmonies just fell out of the sky when we were singing along to 'The House That Built Me' (Miranda Lambert). It was an 'awe' moment!"
